Unlike other books which only provide information in a question and answer format, this book goes beyond the basic preparation, which is necessary for passing the required exams. Aircraft Dispatchers must know as much as the Pilot in Command and must execute an approve flight plans, route and altitude selection, fuel load, all in compliance with FAA regulations. Most Study Guides describe aeronautical knowledge in a lawyer like style, which is hard to comprehend and not necessarily providing enough information. Due to the massive study material necessary, most individuals, with or without aviation experience who choose this profession, having a hard time passing the FAA written, oral and practical exams due to lack of information. The average student even those with aviation background will definitely need to study the content of this book in order to complete the Dispatch class and pass the exams. The instructors will not always cover the required materials in detail. Moreover, many instructors are unable to simply explain the study material, and tend to complicate relevant information unnecessarily. The mandate to pass successfully the final exams, and ultimately, Oral and Practical exams require you to know intimately the material in this book. After at least 5 weeks, studying day in and day out and passing your ADX written and practical test, you finally received your flight dispatcher license. Great achievement! I am not trying to ruin it for you but this is just the beginning of your journey. Next, you need to get yourself ready for your interviews and be so good that they cannot reject you. When I was going through the licensing process many years ago, I realized that there is no good reference in the market to tell future dispatchers what they need to learn - other than all of the technical topics they need to master in order to qualify and pass the dispatcher's license test (Unfortunately this is still the case - that is why I decided to write this book). Also, not everyone has access to flight dispatchers who are actually doing this job already with large airlines. So, chances for new dispatchers to visit the airline's facility and sit with their dispatchers are slim to none. What we learn in dispatch schools are the requirements set by FAA/ICAO for certification purposes. What you need to know to survive daily as a dispatcher in a medium to the large airline, is totally different than what you have learned so far while in school. This book is not a how-to book and it is not intended to teach you how to be a dispatcher. It does not teach you how to dispatch a flight. That is up to your airline to train you and ensure that you are a competent dispatcher. This book will, however, highlight the areas you need to focus on and will discuss why they are important. It attempts to illustrate the big picture for you as a dispatcher and explain how each and everything you do in your daily function, impact hundreds and thousands of customers. You can also use some of the topics explained in this book as an aid to your interview process. In most flight dispatch interviews, you will be given a scenario and will be asked to walk the interviewers through your decision-making process. Some of the topics in this book are followed by an Interview Tip. Take these tips seriously as they would greatly help you succeed in your next dispatch job interview. Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) has implemented the Advanced Air Transportation Technology (AATT) program to investigate future improvements to the national and international air traffic management systems. This research, as part of the AATT program, developed preliminary design requirements for an advanced Airline Operations Control (AOC) dispatcher's workstation, with emphasis on flight planning. This design will support the implementation of an experimental workstation in NASA laboratories that would emulate AOC dispatch operations. The work developed an airline flight plan data base and specified requirements for: a computer tool for generation and evaluation of free flight, user preferred trajectories (UPT); the kernel of an advanced flight planning system to be incorporated into the UPT-generation tool; and an AOC workstation to house the UPT-generation tool and to provide a real-time testing environment. A prototype for the advanced flight plan optimization kernel was developed and demonstrated. The flight planner uses dynamic programming to search a four-dimensional wind and temperature grid to identify the optimal route, altitude and speed for successive segments of a flight. An iterative process is employed in which a series of trajectories are successively refined until the LTPT is identified. The flight planner is designed to function in the current operational environment as well as in free flight. The free flight environment would enable greater flexibility in UPT selection based on alleviation of current procedural constraints. The prototype also takes advantage of advanced computer processing capabilities to implement more powerful optimization routines than would be possible with older computer systems.
